If the database contains works by a creator in different roles, then there will be an entry for each role. For example, Charles Cameron appears as both an architect, and also as an artist

Selecting a name from the list will display all the images in the database associated with that creator.

For example, clicking the link for "Caravaggio" will display the following results:

Do not use too many search terms – it is better to search broadly and refine the search later. Making the search too specific may result in unsuccessful searches.

PLEASE NOTE CAREFULLY

At this time the search system cannot search on parts of words or words less than 4 letters in length.

Eg “Picasso” will work, “Picc” or “Picas” will not

KEYWORD SEARCHING

You may enter as many words as you like in the keyword field in any order and the database will find all images that match ALL the words you have used. These matches may be anywhere in the image information.

FIELD SEARCHING

The database will search only the specified field (Title, Creator, etc) for the search word.

Field searches are on complete strings of letters, not words, so you cannot use more than one search word in field searches. Eg If you entered “Picasso, Pablo” in the Creator field it would retrieve all the works by Picasso, because “Picasso, Pablo” is the exact form of the index entry. However if you used “Pablo Picasso” the search would fail.

Similarly, if you searched for “Portrait of a man” in the Title field the database will find all images with that title. However if you searched for “Portrait man” the search would fail.

LIST TERMS

Instead of entering a word for a search you can select a term from one of the drop-down lists next to the search fields. This will automatically enter the correct index term into the search field.

You can search for terms in more than one field at once, however the database will always only find records that match ALL the search words, so do not make searches too complex.

Once the search result page appears, the available actions are the same as for browse results.
